

The Johari Window

American psychologists Joseph Luft and Harry Ingham developed this model in 1955.

It is the most important tool to analyze individual's inner feelings, build self-awareness and trust. Scientist Pearce and Sharp made clear distinction among three terms:

1. Self-disclosure: Voluntary communication by an individual. As per Altman and Taylor it happens once a bond of closeness and trust has been formed otherwise it is nearly impossible for anyone to unfold innermost layer of oneself. There may be high risk or low risk information. Person makes a deliberate choice about what to share, with whom and when to share.
2. Confession: it is a forced communication about one self.
3. Revelation- Unintentional and inadvertent communication of information about one's self to another. An accidental discovery....of facts....

The Johari Window:

The Johari Window is a framework for understanding conscious and unconscious bias that can help increase self-awareness and our understanding of others. It is the creation of two psychologists, Joseph Luft and Harrington Ingham, who named the model by combining their first names.

It is a useful way of showing how much information you know about yourself and how much is known by others. It has a window with four panes....

1. Open Pane: Known to self/ Known to others: Open Pane includes information such as physical appearance, height, skin and hair colour, occupation, etc.
2. Hidden Pane: Open to self/ Hidden from others: Hidden Pane contains information that one wishes to keep private. Such as dreams, ambitions, negative feelings towards someone, history of abuse.
3. Blind Pane: Blind to self/ Seen by Others: The Blind Pane includes information that can be seen by others but individual is not aware about it. Compliments and feedbacks that make us surprised or we turn defensive while receiving feedback are part of this window.
4. Unknown Pane- Unknown to Self and Others. The Unknown Pane includes everything that you and others do not know about yourself. A hidden talent hitherto unexplored.....

Through self- disclosure...we open and close panes once trust is formed.....this is a way towards self-awareness.
